Decision making related to sending out the appropriate number of offers to ensure an aggressive approach that also does not compromise capacity and other constraints that exist with respect to student spaces. This type of decision making, a complex balance, requires a strong knowledge base regarding offer return rates and sound judgement to deal with unanticipated offer return rates in an effective manner that leads to optimal enrolment.

3. Creating, maintaining the Internal Applications for students who are switching programs or moving to new ones becomes a complex issue overlaid on top of new intake students. The judgement and decision-making to ensure optimal enrolment while maintaining equity to all students, both internal and external (intake applicants), can create issues with students. In addition, when the programs requested are waitlisted the complexity is exacerbated.
